MANAGEMENT OF DAIRY BULL

Herd Has Serious Drawbacks-One Method.

On the majority of farms it is cun tomary to allow the bull to run with the herd. This practise is open to serious objections. In the first place, a bull running with the herd is unsafe from the standpoint of human No bull is absolutely safe, be he ever so gentle. In fact, it is the "gentle" bull that usually kills, cause fewer precautions are taken with animals of this kind than with those that show an ugly disposition, writes John Michels, in Homestead. Then there is the annoyance and worry, especially for children and women, to have a buil run about Hired men also complain about getting up the cows when there is a buil with them and who knows how many have quit their job because of the

A very vital objection to running the bull with the cows is that it impairs the usefulness of the bull, due to excessive service. One service is sufficient and this can be had only when the bull is kept away from the cows. Again, it is difficult to tell when cows have conceived, which makes it impossible to know when the gravel. cows are due to calve, a matter of no small importance.

A further serious objection to running a bull with the herd is that many a valuable buil is disposed of to the butcher because he has become unmanageable with the herd. Most bulls are sold to the butcher before they have had a chance to demonstrate their value

The question now, arises, if the bull is not to run with the herd, how is he to be managed? There are several ways of doing this, but I wish to give here only one of them, one which I have used for a number of years and found satisfactory in all respects. This consists of an inclosure with stable. The bull run is 50 feet square, including the stable, and is inclosed by a solid board fence-64 feet high. The boards are nailed onto 4 by 4's from the inside, which incures great stability. The breeding. pen is also made solld by ling meinch boards and is 614 feet nigh. The cow is bred in this pen by tying her to the front end and then letting in the bull by opening the stable door. The latter closs the pen when opened as shown in the cut. The bull is fed through an opening in the stable.

Water is supplied in the same way. Haveing Fork bridge 30 reds stone.
